

March 2018

Trade growth in Germany remains positive but moderating from strong peak seen in 2017

Key findings:

- Index for Germany fell by -3 points to 64, continuing the decline of the previous months
- Overall growth prospects remain positive, both indices, Air and Ocean, continue to signal expansion
- Air trade dropped significantly by -6 points, which is mainly due to a deterioration in air imports
- In contrast, ocean freight for Germany declined only mildly, with the Land & Vehicles Parts remaining its most important growth driver expected to decelerate compared to air exports growth. The growth outlook for air imports of Machinery Parts and Automotive is expected to normalize after a strong 4th quarter of 2017. The outlook for air imports of Consumer Fashion has deteriorated and is expected to contract slightly in the next three months. The air export growth of Machinery Parts is also expected to slow down slightly, however continuing to remain a vital driver of growth of Germany air exports. The growth of Capital Equipment & Machinery air exports is expected to level off for the next three months.

Ocean trade is expected to stay in the positive territory at 58, albeit a slight decrease (-1 point) compared to the previous month.

The Land Vehicles & Parts industry continues to be one of the leading drivers for German ocean trade growth for both import and export. Chemicals and Products is another industry predicted to contribute significantly to growth, especially important for ocean exports. Ocean export growth of Industrial Raw Materials is expected to pick up in the coming three months. On the other hand, ocean imports of Industrial Raw Materials are expected to contract slightly. In addition, the outlook for Personal & Household Goods has been adjusted downwards significantly, as the forecast for ocean imports has deteriorated for the next three months.

About the DHL Global Trade Barometer:

The DHL Global Trade Barometer is an early indicator for the current state and future development of global trade. It is based on import and export data for a number of intermediates and early-cycle commodities that serve as the basis for further industrial production. Sources for the index are aggregated market data from air and containerized ocean freight from seven countries (China, South Korea, Germany, India, Japan, UK, USA), which account for more than 75 percent of world trade. These data are evaluated using artificial intelligence and various statistical methods and compressed to a single index value that represents the weighted average of the current growth and the upcoming two months of trade. The index, which was designed in cooperation with Accenture, is published four times a year by DHL on a global scale as well as for each of the seven countries surveyed.
